

I'm just like you!

An entrepreneur with a mission.

Not many people know that for most of my life I was terribly afraid to shine my light - In fact I can remember a time when it seemed as though my very presence was offensive to people.

Over and over again I would experience rejection just for being me!

When I shone too brightly it seemed to trigger fear in those around me, and they'd rush to 'correct' me. I would be 'pushed' back down by family, friends and society.

The message I got was 'Don't shine too brightly or you won't be loved'.

When I used to sing and dance as a child, a family member told me outright "Don't call too much attention to yourself".

However my spirit wouldn't be crushed. I rebelled and became a singer - A Childhood dream of mine. I got well known in my hometown of Cancun, Mexico.

Another painful blow came when my ex husband divorced me for being 'too high profile' reinforcing my story of 'don't shine too brightly.'

I bet it's a story you're familiar with!

After having my second child I discovered the world of personal development and online business.

I LOVED it.

I jumped in with both feet, but quickly realised that here again I wasn't shining my light fully - All the years of conditioning, and the fear it had created inside me, were holding me back...

I struggled to find my identity online.

I'd post stuff on social media and it was as though I was INVISIBLE! No one paid any attention to what I was doing.

It was so frustrating.

I'd hazard a guess that you've also experienced this 'crushing and dimming' of your light at some point in your journey.

You've also received the message not to shine too brightly!

Eventually I worked with a high level mentor who was able to SEE me clearly, and so helped me to see myself.

I began to share from the inside out, instead of the outside in.

I realised that the images I'd been using, the visual story I'd been telling online, was not in true alignment with me and my message.

The pictures I was sharing weren't helping me to shine.

Once I GOT this everything changed.

I began using beautiful, on brand photos that reflected the true essence of me...

And my business exploded.
